

Domestic Violence Protection Notices (DVPN) and Domestic Violence Protection Orders (DVPO)

INFORMATION LEAFLET FOR VICTIMS

The aim of a DVPN and DVPO is to provide you with immediate protection following an incident of domestic abuse and to give you time to consider what to do next. You will be contacted by a specialist officer who will provide advice and support to you.

Domestic Violence Protection Notice (DVPN)

What is a DVPN?

A Domestic Violence Protection Notice (DVPN) is a notice served by the police against a person who is aged over 18, where the police reasonably believe that he or she has been violent or has threatened violence against you and that you need to be protected from him or her.

The law allows the police to serve a DVPN on this person even if you do not agree to it.

A Police Superintendent will review all of the information and evidence and may decide for your safety that a DVPN should be issued.

What does a DVPN do?

A DVPN places certain conditions on the person which may include:

- stopping him/her from entering, and being within a certain distance, of your home;

- stopping him/her from making you leave or excluding you from your home;
- requiring him/her to leave your home.

What happens if we live at the same address?

Then the DVPN requires them to leave immediately. They will be able to take with them possessions that they may need.

What happens if the person does not follow the conditions of the DVPN?

You should call the police – if it is an emergency call 999.

The person may be arrested, kept in police custody and then brought before a Magistrates' Court, where the court will consider issuing a DVPO (see over).

Domestic Violence Protection Order (DVPO)

What is a DVPO?

A Domestic Violence Protection Order (DVPO) is an order applied for by the police and made by the Magistrates' Court.

If an order is made it will last for a minimum of 14 days and a maximum of 28 days.

The Order may:

- stop him/her from entering, and being within a certain distance, of your home;
- stop him/her from making you leave or exclude you from your home;
- require him/her to leave your home.

When will the case go to court?

The Magistrates' Court will hear an application for a DVPO within 48 hours (excluding Sundays and Bank Holidays) of the person being served with a DVPN by the police. If he or she does not attend the Magistrates' Court, then a DVPO can be made in his or her absence.

The law allows the Magistrates to make a DVPO against the person even if you do not agree to it. In addition, the Magistrates will take into account the welfare of anyone under 18 who the police consider will be affected by the DVPO.

Do I have to go to court?

No. You do not have to attend the Magistrates' Court hearing. The Magistrates can make a DVPO against the person without you being present.

If I go to court do I have to give evidence?

No. You do not have to give evidence for the hearing, but you may choose to do so. If you do decide to give evidence you may be cross examined by the defence.

What happens if the person does not follow the conditions of the DVPO?

You should call the police – if it is an emergency call 999.

They may be arrested and kept in custody. Within 24 hours (excluding Sundays and Bank Holidays) they will be put before a Magistrates' Court and could be fined up to £5000 and/or sent to prison for up to 2 months.

What other help can I get?

There are a number of organisations that can help you.

You may now be feeling concerned about what happens next. These orders have been introduced to make sure you are safe, and that you have space and time to consider the future, and access the help you may need from specialists.

You may need information about legal matters, housing or finances.

You may want to speak to someone about how you feel and concerns you have about your family.

The police will also give you a list of agencies that are there to support you and help you to choose what you should do next.
